

This is a different story about the colour green. Not only is the imagination allowed free rein, but the text is written in an unusual poetic sort of question and answer style.

What are those green things?

What green things?

Those green things in the laundry basket.

Those green things in the laundry basket are your socks.

Oh, I thought they were lizards eating my T-shirts.

Teachers will find it a refreshing way to deal with the colour green.

Kathy Stinson, Those Green Things: Annick Press, 1985; 24 pages; full colour illustrations; $4.95 paper, $12.95 cloth; primary level.